BE READY FOR THE RECOUNT.

Police Census-Takers to Begin Work Next Monday Morning.

"What is your name? What is your age?" said the census-taker to the first man he met. He was a young man, bright and polite, for bright and early Monday morning a policeman will call upon you, book and pencil in hand, to secure your official existence as an integral part of the population of New York.

The policeman will not bother you with impertinent questions about your private affairs, the indecency that has hung over your neck like a black cloud, or any other thing that belongs to you and not to the public.

The policeman census-taker will ask you just two questions about yourself. "What is your name?" and "What is your age?" The Mayor's police census will record the name, address, sex and age of each person in each house, apartment, flat or tenement in the city limits, and nobody will be exempted or omitted.

The books will be returned to the Mayor's office, and the returns carefully compiled there under the immediate supervision of Mayor Grant, and then we shall know just how big New York has grown.

When it is ascertained just how many of New York's people were omitted from the census taken by Rep. Porter's incompetent agents, then we shall know how many Congressmen and Assemblymen it was promised to beat us out.

President Wilson, of the Health Department, has been making an investigation among the homes, restaurants, saloons and charitable institutions of the city, and is forced to the conclusion that they were systematically ignored by Porter's men, and that of 24,000 inmates, nurses, attendants, clerks, physicians and minor employees of these forty institutions not more than 2,500 were enumerated, more than 21,000 being unaccounted for.

In other words, had no existence.
Each policeman will have a census-book, each sheet of which will contain twenty names, so that a count of the sheets with a little multiplication will speedily produce a rough return of the city's population.

There has been an attempt at a scare, in a threat to get the census-takers out of the Police Board restraining them from census-taking on the ground that they have no such power, but Sections 334 and 335 of the Code provide for this work completely.

WATCHING THE TEDIOUS PROCESS OF GETTING A JURY FOR HIS TRIAL.

There was another big crowd in Part III. of General Sessions this morning, where the work of selecting a competent and impartial jury to try old Mr. McGonigal for causing the death of Annie Goodwin, the pretty Harlem cigarette girl, is moving along very slowly.

This is the fourth day of the trial, and up to this morning only eight jurors had been selected. They are: Diederich Wuehrman, grocer, 3 Winthrop place; Casimir F. Bogart, merchant, 114 Warren street; Max S.
Kohman, merchant, 14 West Twenty-third street; William H. Clough, real estate, Equitable Building; Ludwig Eisler, butcher, 307 West One Hundred and Forty-fourth street; Fred Yungel, liquor, 300 East Twenty-seventh street; Samuel Solomon, baggage, 405 Grand street; Isaac Miller, 1000 Third avenue.

When the jurors took their seats in the box at 11 o'clock Assistant District Attorney Bedford and the prisoner's counsel, Frank Oliver, were already in court.

The prisoner, McGonigal, had been brought down from the Tombs a few minutes before, and his broad-brimmed and velvet legal assistant held a consultation with him lasting several minutes in the prisoner's pen.

The old man looked very sullen and dejected, and as he lumbered passed through the court-room he tried hard to evade the scores of eyes that were riveted on him from all parts of the room.

Mr. Halliday, sister of the dead girl, was present to-day. Prof. Herrmann, the presiding judge, was an interested spectator of the proceedings and occupied a chair next to the District Attorney, within the rail.

District Attorney Bedford conducted the examination of witnesses in person this morning.

Patrick J. Quinn and Charles H. Acton both had nothing to say to their ability to try the case impartially, so strong opinions had been formed, and were expressed by mutual consent.

John N. Fitzgerald, in response to Assistant District Attorney Bedford's question, said that he had read the case, but had formed no impression of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner.

Mr. Fitzgerald was satisfactory to both Bedford and Oliver, and was sworn as the eighth juror. He lives at 34 West Fifty-third street and is an ice dealer.

John Brant, a consultation in the furnishing goods at 152 Park Row was accepted and sworn as the ninth juror.

THREE HUSBANDS—ONE BABY.

A Complication that a Pretty Little Woman Must Explain in Court.

Judge Moore, of the Kings County Court of Sessions, was called upon to-day to consider a case that is a rarity in jurisprudence.
Before him was arraigned Edina Tromont, a small and prepossessing young Italian woman, carrying a little baby in her arms.

Edina was charged with bigamy, having married no less than three times without the intervention of death or divorce.

She could speak no English, but she wept and sobbed in answer to a language that is understood the world over. The baby took the name of the mother and the court-room was filled with the sound.

Mr. Tromont's present affinity is a laborer in South Brooklyn. She has been married before now as Rosa Frimmano and Rosa Gerardo.

She pleaded not guilty, and her trial was set for Wednesday next.

TO INVESTIGATE COL. BURKE.

Board of Appraisers' Action on Big Undervaluations.

Trouble has broken out between two officials in the Public Stores in Light street.
One of them is Gen. Dennis Burke, Chief of the Fifth Division of the Appraiser's Office, and the other is Examiner Lessor, one of his subordinates.

The row has already reached such serious proportions that the matter in controversy has been referred to the Board of General Appraisers, who will make a thorough investigation next week.

It is all about two big invoices of kid gloves received by the importing firm of Fassant & Co., of 312 Church street, and Douglas & Co., of 45 Greene street, which were valued in the aggregate at $75,000.

Examiner Lessor, after a careful inspection of the goods, decided that they had been undervalued to the amount of $10,000, and he advanced them that amount, making the duty payable upon them together with the penalties for undervaluation, some $8,000 in excess of what the goods would have paid under the original invoices.

When the report of the examiner was submitted to Gen. Burke he immediately cancelled the advance made by the examiner and the Customs House, are sending very much about the case and refuse to give any details.

Witnesses have been summoned on both sides, and the first hearing is set down for Monday, at the General Appraisers' Bureau.
The officials, both at the Appraiser's Office and the Customs House, are sending very
details.

Collector Edwards, Special Agent Wilbur, Gen. Burke and Mr. Lessor all declined to have anything to say about the matter today.

Friends of Examiner Lessor say that Gen.
Burke's cancellation of the advance was made arbitrarily and without any investigation.

Interesting developments are promised.

NEWARK, Sept. 26.—William Hilderbrandt,
